

The Russian Government Agrees With the MK-Ultra Gate Evidence

The consensus that emerged beginning in early March 2011 could only grow stronger as a result of White House inaction, presidential statements of intent followed by omission and critical analyses of the U.S. leader's behavior. Individually and collectively they delivered more confirming evidence that the case made of the secret piggybacking agenda necessitated accountability at the highest levels of the United States government.

What occurred during the trip to Europe added to what had already transpired in the United States since early March 2011. Concurrence with the MK-Ultra Gate analysis increased when HRH Duke of Edinburgh employed the lexicon during the State Dinner to describe the relationship between Buckingham Palace and the White House and the band was instructed to interrupt his toast to Her Royal Majesty on the last Tuesday of May. It grew when Britain's Foreign Minister William Hague on behalf of the U.K. Prime Minister delivered the communiqué that President Obama et al. no longer garners trust and legitimacy on Wednesday – that his administration must relinquish power. And the day after when attending the first day of the G8 Summit in France his sit-down press conference with his Russian counterpart witnessed a stinging rebuke for his and his predecessor's administrations' unlawful and improper conduct.

As soon as the interview began President Medvedev engaged in a very aggressive and embellished dbl-h SNL M., which as these photos show instantly triggered a profound unease in the U.S. leader.

Note: This is the joint press conference from which the book cover's photograph is from.

Watching the entire video stream (the White House upload of 13 minutes, 14 seconds – Taylor Identifier and quantum ratifier) one cannot but draw from what's observed that the cumulative effect of all admonishments since early March has taken its toll on a leader that clearly has a conscience; troubled to the core over what's snowballed since the mid-February epiphany.

At 2:06, to a reference to discussing "broader economics", the President begins to scratch his raised left wrist in a protracted fashion. This in lexiconic terms is a Close M. that like so many geo-gestures mimics hypno-torture targeting the skin, whether temporary itches or the procurement of lesions that last days and trigger a much more pronounced feeling of being violated. His intent is to draw attention to the matter of quantum.

In response and to mitigate what he knows to be fatal to his presidency he red flags the remark “we are confident we can get this done [3:13: Gutierrez M.]”; arguing he can resuscitate his tattered reputation by engaging in what all coalition partners have been waiting ever-less patiently for: following-through on all his promises, assurances, guarantees and representations.

He also red flags the phrase “resolves conflicts in a peaceful way [4:13: Cl.M.]” – to suggest that there’s no need to resort to drastic measures like removal from office.

Problematic, however, is he's had an opportunity every hour of every day since taking office in January 2009 to materially and substantially advance coalition interests and objectives and didn't. Then he went on record on December 22nd to say he would and then again and again as documented.

A review of the chronology of events since filing the FBI complaint on Thursday, February 24th demonstrates what would be described in non-academic terminology as the same 'ol same ol' coming from the Obama administration. At its first opportunity, which was Monday, February 28th, the response was the President was going to "pursue a new approach based on concrete steps". It's now been 37 days and there's only been inaction.

On March 14th French President Sarkozy used the lexicon on Secretary Clinton, which was his way of acknowledging the FBI matter.

The President entered the diplomatic corridor on Friday, March 18th with a message that he was going to take action that would advance coalition interests and objectives "swiftly". The following day, March 19th, his Brazilian counterpart embarrassed him on the world stage. Since then there's only been inaction.

On March 22nd, ABC News put the White House on notice that the fourth estate wasn't going to look the other way. And CBS did the same on March 29th out of which came more assurances of the kind given on February 28th.

This series omissions followed by assurances followed by omissions speaks for itself and couldn't but lead to the kind of censure he received in Europe and this day with his Russian counterpart.

The tension between the two presidents is so thick it would take a chainsaw to cut through it. Inescapably observable throughout the press conference the Russian leader is cold and distant; in fact so disgusted he doesn't conceal that sentiment and turns his head several times as a show of agreement with the MK-Ultra Gate analysis.

He employs the lexicon once to state the U.S. leader hasn't been "doing fine work in moving the [coalition] forward" and what has been advanced in terms of mutual interests is adversely impacted by the scandal.

I just want to emphasize that my interactions with President Medvedev have always been excellent. I think that he is doing fine work in moving Russia forward on a whole range of issues [6:21: Medvedev: Harriet M.; looks away].

President Obama witnessing the protracted use of the B.I.M. and hearing a member of the audience effect an NBC M. jumps into action, effecting a coalition identifying triple Kernan M. to acknowledge the malfeasance he's been caught engaging in has triggered a sensitivity in international relations.

Dimitry it's good to see you again and I look forward to [working with you over] the next day and a half [6:38: Cl.M.; Medvedev: looks away]

[9:59: protracted B.I.M.] Today we talked about how keep and further develop these achievements and how to develop our relations in what are quite sensitive issues [10:14: Obama: Kernan M.x3; press core camera clicking flurry]

That two major governments have now gone on the diplomatic record as supporting the coalition's conclusions is demonstrative of the inevitability of the end of the Obama presidency.

What's observed on this day is the exact opposite of what photos captured during the April 2009 G20 Summit in London – a meeting of world leaders that produced the piggybacking advancing, diplomacy extending initiative documented in Secretary of State Hillary Clinton Announces the Coalition Elected the Canadian Lawyer the Custodian-in-Council's First Chief Executive:
